

US.

the boobu & cutie chronicles

a magazine cutie made for boobu, entirely without her knowing

FROM “YO” TO US.

Two phones, one panda emoji, and 67,883 messages later — the unauthorized, unbelievably real biography of a love story that started with absolutely nothing and somehow became everything.

-
- | | |
|---|-----|
| “I AM IN LOC” — the autocorrect confession that started it all | p.6 |
| “REACHED 👍👍” — a man’s love language, fully decoded | p.8 |
| BURGER FARM FOREVER — the booth that keeps getting booked, three years running | p.9 |
-

PLUS: 396 “I love you”s, 272 autocorrect disasters & one very patient panda 🐼

IN THIS ISSUE

Inside This Issue

03

A NOTE FROM CUTIE*Everything he found going back through three and a half years of us*

04

BY THE NUMBERS*67,883 messages, charted, counted, and mildly judged*

05

THE DATA, CONTINUED*The emoji leaderboard, the love clock, and the 10 p.m. problem*

06

FEATURE: HOW WE MET*From “Yo” to “will u be my girlfriend???”*

08

STYLE & QUIRKS*A phrasebook, a hall of fame, and 202 counts of “Reached”*

09

THE TIMELINE*Every turning point, in the order it actually happened*

10

WHAT’S NEXT*The chat log tells your fortune*

MADE BY

Cutie

MADE FOR

Boobu

SOURCE MATERIAL

67,883 WhatsApp messages, Dec
2022–Aug 2026

A NOTE FROM CUTIE

I Read Every Message We've Ever Sent Each Other

Boobu, I have to admit something before you get any further: I went back and read every single message we've sent each other since that first "Yo" on December 31st, 2022. All 67,883 of them. Yes, including the ones about the branch transfer logistics. Yes, including the ones where I definitely should have said sorry faster than I did.

I didn't set out to make you a magazine. I just wanted to see the whole thing laid out, start to finish, because from inside a relationship it's easy to only remember the highlights. What I found instead was something better than highlights: the ordinary parts. The nightly "Reached 👍👍" I apparently cannot stop sending. The 296 times I called you cutie before I'd admitted, out loud, that I meant it. That night in May when I asked if you were my girlfriend and somehow needed you to answer before I could believe it myself.

I found the autocorrect fail I will never live down. I found 165 of my own "sorry"s and was relieved to count only 8 real fights against them. I found that I've said "I love you" 225 times to your 171, and I'm choosing to read that less like a scoreboard and more like: I got to say it to you 225 times. That's really the whole point of any of this.

So here it is — not the highlight reel, but the real one. The slang only the two of us understand. The 10 p.m.-to-midnight window where we apparently do all our best talking. Udaipur, and the Mumbai itinerary I planned like a military operation. The fact that as of the last message on file, we were still debating restaurants and I was still trying to smuggle clothes past your parents in a gym bag.

1,317 days down. For what it's worth, I'd read all 67,883 messages again just to land back here.

Yours,
Cutie

THE DATA & STATS SPREAD • PART ONE

67,883 Messages. One Relationship.
Zero Regrets (Probably).

67,883

total messages exchanged since December 31, 2022 – the day one of you texted the other a single word: “Yo.”

Boobu 🐼 sent
38,402

Cutie sent 29,481

Boobu talks roughly 30% more. For the record, this was her request to note.

1,317

DAYS SINCE THE FIRST “YO”

From Dec 31, 2022 to this printing.

87%

OF DAYS, THEY TEXTED

1,144 out of 1,317 days on record.

3.9

AVG. WORDS PER MESSAGE

A relationship built almost entirely on fragments.

59

MESSAGES, AVERAGE ACTIVE DAY

On any day they spoke at all.

396

“I LOVE YOU”S ON RECORD

225 from Cutie, 171 from Boobu.

202

TIMES JAYESH TEXTED “REACHED”

Upon arriving literally anywhere. See p.8.

388 Instagram Reels forwarded to each other — 236 by Cutie, the self-appointed reel guy

272 self-corrected typos on record — a whole second language of “oops”

THE DATA & STATS SPREAD • PART TWO

The Emoji Leaderboard & the 10 P.M. Problem

TOP EMOJI, COMBINED — BY VOLUME

BOOBU'S TOP THREE

🙄 🙁 😂

JAYESH'S TOP THREE

🙄 🙁 😓

THE LOVE CLOCK — MESSAGES BY HOUR OF DAY

The golden window is 9 p.m. to midnight — nearly 30,000 messages, or 44% of everything ever said, crammed into three hours. Peak hour: 10 p.m., with 11,374 messages. The dead zone is 3–5 a.m., which, to be fair, is where it should be.

“At their average pace, that works out to a new message roughly every sixteen minutes they were awake — for three and a half years.”

Sunday

the busiest day of the week, 18,359 messages strong. Sundays don’t stand a chance.

243 vs. 200

good nights vs. good mornings. Better at goodbyes than hellos — mornings are hard for everyone.

THE FEATURE ARTICLE

How We Met (Or: How Long Two People Can Ignore the Obvious)

As told entirely by our own receipts — every line below is verbatim from the chat, dug up by Cutie for this issue.

It began, as these things apparently do now, with a single unpunctuated word. December 31, 2022, 9:57 p.m.: Boobu texts “Yo.” Cutie replies with a photo. Nobody involved had any idea this was the opening line of anything. For the next three months, this is a friendship of shared movie links, group-chat cake logistics, and mutual complaining about work — the two of them, by every available signal, simply colleagues who got along.

The first real crack in that story appears on March 24, 2023, gift-wrapped inside a joke. Boobu is teasing Cutie about a bouquet of roses that arrived at her place — for her roommate, disappointingly, not for her. Cutie, a little too invested for a bystander, demands the deliveryman’s address. And then, mid-tease, Boobu calls him something she’d never called him before.

FROM THE CHAT LOG · MARCH 24, 2023, 11:29 PM

Boobu: Han cutie

Boobu: Tumhe toh yu hi pasand kr lega koi

(“Yeah, cutie — someone would like you just like that.”)

“Cutie” sticks. It will go on to be used 296 more times over the next three years, but on this particular night it’s just a word thrown into a joke, the kind two friends can pretend not to notice. A week and a half later, on April 2nd, the pretending gets a little harder to maintain. A throwaway plan — “3:30 ki movie, chaloge?” — gets a one-word yes. It’s not framed as a date. Nothing about it is official. But a full year later, unprompted, one of them will look back at this exact afternoon and call it “two years ago today” — the kind of thing you only mark on a calendar in hindsight, once you know what it turned out to be.

Through April and into May, the texture of the chat changes without either of them quite announcing it. Cutie starts reporting in the moment he lands anywhere — “Reached 👍👍” — a habit that will outlast the friendship stage entirely and rack up 202 appearances before this printing. Mutual friends start noticing. On May 19th, Boobu reports that a coworker is visibly “jealous” — not of Cutie, she clarifies, but of them, of “the way I talk about you.” She hadn’t told anyone anything official. She hadn’t needed to.

CAST OF CHARACTERS

Boobu 🐼 — saved in the phone with a panda emoji nobody has fully explained. The one who started calling him this, long before either of them admitted to anything.

Cutie — the “Reached” texter. Sends 60% of the 388 reels on record. Says “I love you” first, and says it most.

The Movie Group — the deniable cover story for months of one-on-one plans.

TIMESTAMP

“Didn’t know if I was.

You never said it out loud before.”

— Boobu, May 28, 12:51 AM,

one minute before everything became official

HOW WE MET • CONTINUED

The Ask, the Autocorrect, and the First “I Love You”

The night it finally happens is, fittingly, almost an accident. It's past midnight on May 28th and the two of them are deep in an unrelated argument about a movie — something about a man who wrecked a relationship and never quite learned from it. Cutie, defending himself and men in general, reaches for a joke: “Say by my GF.” And the joke stops being a joke immediately.

FROM THE CHAT LOG • MAY 28, 2023, 12:50–12:54 AM

Boobu: I am your GF? 🙄🙄

Cutie: Yesssss — Are you — ...Not

Boobu: I wanna be. Didn't know if I was. You never said it out loud before 🙄

Cutie: Ok let me ask you. Will u be my girlfriend???

Boobu: Yesssss 🤩

Boobu: Will you be my boyfriend?

Cutie: Yess... Always

It takes four minutes, start to finish. By 12:58 AM Boobu is writing “my heart is happy” and Cutie already has a plan: a date, tomorrow, 3 p.m., The Lamppost, Jaipur. “Yes cutie,” she answers — the nickname, seven weeks old at this point, finally landing on solid ground.

What happens the following afternoon has since become, without anyone officially voting on it, the single most-cited moment in this couple's recorded history. Hours before the first date of his life with his new girlfriend, Cutie is texting to confirm plans when autocorrect steps in and does what autocorrect does:

MAY 28, 2023 • 3:08 PM

“I am in LOV” → “LoC*”

For readers unfamiliar with the geography: LoC stands for Line of Control, the heavily militarized India-Pakistan border. Cutie meant something considerably less geopolitical. The correction was never explained further — it didn't need to be. It has been quietly legendary ever since.

The date itself goes uncommented-on in the chat — some things are lived rather than narrated. But that night, once Cutie texts “Reached” from home, something shifts one final time. “In your heart also,” he writes. “I love you 🤩🙄,” she writes back — the first of 396 times that sentence would appear in this chat. Day one of officially being together, and they'd already said it. Everything since started right

BY THE NUMBERS

4 min. girlfriend to boyfriend, ask to answer

15 hrs. ask to first official date

1 day official to first “I love you”

POSTSCRIPT

The Lamppost has since been replaced, in the couple's own words, by Burger Farm as “where it all started” — see p.9. Neither location has been consulted for comment.

STYLE & CULTURE

The Boobu & Cutie Phrasebook (A Field Guide)

THE DICTIONARY

Yaar	"Mate" / "dude." Boobu's verbal comma, dropped into nearly every disagreement. 431 uses.
Oooo(o)	Cutie's all-purpose reaction — surprise, approval, stalling for time. 589 uses across all spellings.
Sahi hai	"That's right" / "cool." Cutie's highest form of praise. 201 uses.
Achaaa	The elastic "oh, okay" — stretched depending on how okay it actually is. 173 uses.
Kkrh	Shorthand for "doing it now." The text equivalent of a shrug-nod. 113 uses.
Kya scene hai	"What's the plan." The opening line of basically every evening. 84 uses.
Bacha	Literally "kid" or "leftover" — used almost exclusively to gently roast one another. 50 uses.

THE REEL ECONOMY

388 Instagram Reels exchanged like little gifts — 236 of them from Cutie, who apparently cannot watch something funny without immediately forwarding it. Average follow-up: "did you watch it?"

STRETCHED FOR EMPHASIS

A whole secondary alphabet of dragged-out feeling: oooooh (118), awwwww (38), yesss/yessss (86 combined), ufffff (17), issshhh (16). Punctuation, but make it emotional.

AUTOCORRECT HALL OF FAME

- 01 "I am in LOV" → "LoC*" — the legend, p.7
- 02 "Don't worry" → "Worry*"
- 03 "Nic3" → "Nice*"
- 04 "Gem Z" → "Gen*" (meant Gen Z)
- 05 "Kuch series hai" → "Serious*"
- 06 "Or aap ko mis" → "Miss*"

272 self-corrections on record. This is a curated sample.

THE NICKNAME MASTHEAD

Boobu 🐼 — used 1,124 times, permanently saved with a panda. The origin remains, appropriately, undocumented.

Cutie — 296 uses, first deployed March 24, 2023, months before either of them said anything official. It stuck so well, this issue retired his real name in its favor.

Baby — 426 uses. The reigning universal default.

Raja / Rani / Sona — 62 / 21 / 47 uses. Reserved for the softer occasions.

THE RITUAL

"Reached 👍👍" — Cutie's love language of logistics. Arrives anywhere, reports for duty. 202 times and counting.

THE TIMELINE

Every Turning Point, In Order

2022

Dec 31 — “Yo.” The first message on record. No context, no punctuation, no idea what it started.

2023

Mar 24 — First “cutie.” Smuggled into a joke about who would ever like him. (Reader: several people would.)

Apr 2 — The movie. A 3:30pm plan, nothing official. A year later, remembered unprompted as “two years ago today.”

May 28, 12:52 AM — The Ask. “Will u be my girlfriend???” “Yesssss.” Nobody had said it out loud before this exact minute.

May 28, 3:08 PM — The Incident. Hours before the first date: “I am in LOV” autocorrects to “LoC.” A legend is born.

May 28, 10:48 PM — First “I love you.” Day one of officially being together.

Jul 18 — Two months official. The 18th quietly becomes their monthly holiday.

Aug 6 — Cutie tells his mother.

Aug 25 — “Mummy asked me to marry now.” Everyone laughs. Nobody fully denies it.

Nov 18 — Six months. Udaipur hotel bookings already underway — their first real trip together.

2024 – 2026

Jan 27, '24 — Boobu, unprompted: “1 year of you falling for me 🥰”

Dec '24 — A full day-by-day Mumbai itinerary, planned like a military operation.

The Proposal Countdown — a running bit that refuses to resolve: “Aap kab kar rahe ho propose” (Oct '24) · “We will baby, but you gotta propose first” (Sep '25) · “Mujhe propose kab kroge” (Feb '26). Jury's still out.

May 18, '26 — Third anniversary. “Happiest Anniversary Love ❤️ You are the best thing that ever happened to me 🥰” — followed by an hour spent debating restaurants and smuggling going-out clothes past parents in a gym bag.

Aug 8, '26 — Most recent message on file. Spiderman tickets, a laptop, and dinner plans. Still ordinary. Still very much on.

1,317 days down. This entry is still being written.

WHAT'S NEXT

The Chat Log Reads Your Fortune

Not written in the stars. Written in 67,883 text messages, which is arguably more reliable.

ON THE PROPOSAL

The word “propose” has surfaced at least six times since October 2024 — asked almost exclusively by Boobu, deflected almost every time. The pattern suggests: it’s coming. This publication cannot provide a date. It can confirm Boobu will bring it up again within roughly four months of this printing.

ON TRAVEL

Goa has been “the plan” since November 2024 without, as far as this publication can determine, actually happening yet. Forecast: it happens — possibly by accident, most likely after a Sunday spent doing absolutely nothing else.

ON THE NEXT 30 DAYS

At a historical average of 59 messages a day, expect roughly 1,770 more before your next “18th.” At least five will be “sahi hai.” At least one typo will become permanent folklore.

ON THE LONG RUN

A 165-sorries-to-8-fights ratio isn’t nothing. Neither is saying “I love you” 396 times without it once sounding routine. If the numbers are any kind of oracle, this one runs a sequel.

That's everything I found.

The rest, we're still writing — together.